Noah Comes Back

Age Fan Becomes Disgusted With Pitchers and Stops Batting Itself, Himself by Gun.

The town of Cannonsburg, Pa., boasts of the oldest baseball pitcher in the world. He's 88, and his name is William C. Bedillion.

A week or so ago he was watching a game between a visiting club and the team representing the McConnell Mills, with which he is connected. The opposition was hitting the McConnell pitcher all over the lot.

"Why don't you put in another pitcher?" asked Bedillion, of his manager.

"Ain't got any," was the answer.

"Well, you've got one now," said Bedillion peeling off his coat vest and other outside rigging. "And this pitcher's name is Bedillion."

To the amazement of the crowd Bedillion went to the bar and took up the pitching chores. And to the great amazement of the assembled, Bedillion pitched three full innings, struck out four men, passed one bat, hit another, but did not allow a hit.

Bedillion was a star player in his youth and played ball as often as once a week up to the time he was 45.
